Passcode lock screen turn off notification

On July 20, 2018, Kirk McElhearn posted that we use our iOS devices to stay up to date on important information. See who emailed you, important messages, and more with notifications on the iPhone lock screen. However, with default iOS settings, sometimes personal information you don't want others to see can be displayed on the lock screen, and anyone who can see your iPhone or iPad can potentially access your iPhone's personal information, even if it's locked. This means that if your iPhone is lost or stolen by someone who has the iOS device, you won't need the passcode to see the information on the iOS lock screen. Even those who randomly walk past your phone when you're not there can potentially see confidential information while it's locked. Fortunately, Apple iOS includes a number of privacy settings to control what data may appear on the lock screen, but many people ignore those settings. Do you want your confidential information to be confidential? In this guide, we'll show you what you can control and how to change these settings to keep your personal information off the iPhone lock screen. Lock screen notifications you've certainly seen often: tap your iPhone or pick it up and the display will wake up and display a number of notifications on the lock screen. Scroll through them, view some of the information, and even reply to messages, etc. You don't even need to enter your passcode or use Touch ID (or Face ID). This is because there is a setting that allows your iPhone to display recent notifications. To hide notifications, go to Settings > Touch ID & Passcode (or Face ID & Passcode if you're using an iPhone X). Scroll down a bit to allow access to locked settings. As you can see, there's a lot of information you can hide here. The following is a deep dive into what each notification displays on the lock screen and how to make this information private. Today view If you're using Today view – this is the ability to display widgets that appear on swipes to the right of your iPhone display – you might find it useful to view data without unlocking your iPhone. But if so, anyone who answers the phone can see this data as well. Depending on the type of widgets you use, strangers may see a lot of personal information: notifications from different apps, messages, emails, calendars, and more. It's a good idea to turn this off unless the Today view widget doesn't display personal information. Recent notifications can be displayed on the lock screen. These can be e-mail notifications that subject lines; messages that can display the full text of short messages; and all sorts of other messages from any app that displays notifications. If you turn this off, you won't see notifications on the lock screen. In some cases, notifications appear after you unlock your phone; it is not; others, you will be able to drag down the top of the screen to get notifications. Control Center Control Center is a small palette of buttons and sliders that you can use to control certain things on your iOS device. In Control Center, you can turn wi-fi and Bluetooth on or off, control music playback, adjust brightness, and more. I do this often above and also have to turn on the flashlight on my iPhone. There's no actual access to your personal information from Control Center, except the Home button, which allows someone to control the smart devices you set up to use Apple HomeKit. Siri Siri knows a lot about you. And Siri has a lot to say about you. However, if siri is available on the lock screen, anyone can find out some of the information on your iPhone, but you can also send messages and make phone calls that seem to come from you. While using Siri on the lock screen is practical, it can be risky. For example, if Siri is active, ask: Who does this iPhone belong to? Your phone displays a business card when the user has set up their contact in Settings > Contacts > My Info. However, if you turn it off, you lose the ability for anyone who finds your phone to find out who it belongs to. Reply with message and Return missed calls Both options allow you to reply to messages or return phone calls without unlocking your phone. If they are active, anyone, literally anyone, can respond to people who contact you or receive personal information about you or impersonate you. Be sure to turn them off unless you're absolutely sure you'll never lose your iPhone. Home Control As mentioned above, you can access Home controllers from Control Center. There are only a few smart light bulbs, but if there are things like an intelligent bell and lock, it's a good idea to turn that off. Wallet Do you really want anyone to have access to your Wallet - with ApplePay and credit and debit cards - when your iPhone is locked? If not, and this is indeed the case for everyone, turn off this option. USB Accessories Your new iOS 11.4.1 device, this setting instructs your iPhone or iPad to use USB accessories only if you've entered your passcode if you haven't unlocked your device in more than an hour. You can read this interesting new security feature, called USB Limited Mode, here: Anti-Hack feature comes with iOS 11.4.1 ... But is that good enough? Bottom line Take some time to review these settings. You may be surprised how much information people can access when your iPhone or iPad is locked. These are easy to turn off, and while some of these features are convenient, you have to consider them against the possibility of someone finding or stealing your phone or just passing by table, you'll find more than you want. If you want to hide the preview of notifications on the iPhone lock screen, you can disable access to the lock screen for the Notifications view. There are several ways to disable lock screen notifications. Notifications will still appear when the device is unlocked. Option 1: Turn off app notification previews on the lock screen Messages in notifications are known as previews or message previews. Apple allows you to disable previews of Messages, Mail, or third-party apps directly from the Notifications Settings screen. Step 1: Open settings > notification. Step 2: Tap Messages or other apps in the list. Step 3: Scroll down to turn off The Presentation on the lock screen to deactivate the Show Previews slider. Option 2: Turn off Notification View in the Lock screen settings notification view, which is part of the Notification Center and allows you to view previous notifications on the lock screen. If you don't want this information to appear on the lock screen, you can disable it as follows. Step 1: Touch ID and Passcode >. Step 2: If you have set the password, enter the password. Step 3: Scroll down to the Allow access locked section, and then turn off Notification View. Tips: You can block access to the lock screen for Siri, Today view, and respond to messages if necessary. Option 3: Limit interrupts by turning off the network connection If you don't want to be disturbed, mute your device, or enable Do Not Disturb mode so that it doesn't make sound or vibrate, learn more about R, how to enable Do Not Disturb mode on your iPhone/iPad. Or you can temporarily turn off cellular data or Wi-Fi so apps don't get notified. Related Articles You can find the steps below to completely secure the Lock Screen on your iPhone by disabling Lock Screen notifications, Message Content Notifications, Reply messages from Lock Screen function and Disable Widgets, Wallet and Home Control with Lock Screen on your iPhone. Secure iPhone Lock Screen The iPhone lock screen displays notifications, allows you to respond to notifications, and makes it super convenient to manage tasks directly from the Screen. While this default setting is so convenient and user-friendly, it's worth disabling so much information that can be seen by people around you and ruling out the possibility of personal data misuse. Depending on what you want the lock screen to be secure, you can disable all or selected information from the on the iPhone lock screen. 1. Disabling notifications on iPhone Lock Screen As you should notice, notifications keep displayed on the Lock Screen on your iPhone, and this is undesirable in situations where you are sitting with other people. Follow these steps to completely disable notifications on the iPhone lock screen. It's best to use an App-by-App basis. 1. On the iPhone home screen, tap Settings. 2. On the settings screen, tap Notifications. 3. On the notifications screen, select the apps you want to block notifications from. In this case, let me tap WhatsApp, assuming you get a lot of lock screen notifications from WhatsApp and want to disable them. 4. On the next screen, disable the Show On Lock Screen option. This disables all notifications from WhatsApp on the iPhone lock screen. Similarly, you can tap on other apps and disable notifications about these apps, as well as on the iPhone lock screen. Note: You'll still be able to find notifications in the Notification Center because the ability to show in the Notification Center is still enabled (see image above). 2. Block the content of messages in notifications In case you want to receive notifications from apps like WhatsApp, the iPhone Messages app and others, you can easily block the content of messages in notifications. This ensures that you'll still receive lock screen notifications, but there will be no message content in these notifications, making it difficult for anyone to get an image of the type of messages they've received. You must also disable the content of messages in notifications by app. In this case, let's say you want to disable the message content of notifications in the Messages app. On the iPhone home screen, tap Settings. 2. On the Settings screen, tap Notifications. 3. On the next screen, tap the app you want to block message content from in the Notifications app. In this case, tap messages. On the next screen, scroll down to the Message Settings section and turn off Show Previews by turning off the switch (see image below) This option ensures that you'll continue to receive notifications from the Messages app on the iPhone lock screen, but there will be no message content in the notification. Similarly, you can block message content in notifications for other popular apps like WhatsApp, Facebook Messenger, Twitter and others. Disable the message reply feature on the iPhone lock screen Although it's really so convenient to be able to reply to messages directly from the iPhone lock screen, this feature can be abused by anyone who causes malice or deliberate damage. By following these steps, reply to message so that no one responds to messages on the iPhone lock screen. 1. Open the Settings app on your iPhone. 2. 2. tap touch &Touch ID; Passcode. 3. On the next screen, enter your password. 4. On the Touch ID & Passcode screen, scroll down to the Allow access locked section and disable The Reply message option, with the toggle unlocked. Note: To set settings, you'll need to enable passcode or Touch ID on your iPhone. The Reply message and other settings will be grayed out if passcode or Touch ID isn't enabled on your iPhone. Disable widgets, Home Control and wallet on the iPhone Lock Screen You can further protect your Lock Screen from your iPhone by disabling Widgets, Home Control and Wallet from lock screen on your iPhone. 1. Open the Settings app on your iPhone 2. On the Settings screen, tap Touch ID & Passcode. 3. On the next screen, go to Allow access locked and disable widgets, home control, and wallet (see picture below). How to set the SIM card lock on iPhone
